Election Day is November 3rd!

Election season holds many meaningful opportunities to engage with candidates on issues that matter most to you. These questions can be used if someone comes to your door, gives you a call, or if you attend a candidate event and have the opportunity to ask a question.

How will you work to make homeownership attainable for more of your constituents?

There are solutions that exist at the local, state, and federal level to expand homeownership. These could include land-use reforms, investing in construction and repair, or improving access to land.

What would you do to make sure we preserve the housing stock we already have?

Maintaining the housing stock we already have can look like supporting current homeowners in making repairs, encouraging climate resiliency, and making sure homes don't become vacant or abandoned by supporting estate planning.

How would you work to better protect renters and hold bad actors accountable?

Companies that own large amounts of rental housing often evict at a higher rate and are more likely to have code violations. This means more people live in unsafe housing.

What zoning reforms do you support to diversify housing options?

At the local level, requirements such as minimum lot size, setbacks, and square footage, and zoning restrictions all impact the size and type of housing that can be built. Current standards often result in large, single-family homes or vacant lots that can't be activated.
